SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, which he names "Penelope," in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin retires from business, wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for his daughter when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Lanny visits her and Nance persuades her to smuggle out a letter which a confederate of Nance steals.

For a moment she considered telephoning Dan McNamara, then decided the worthy fellow might prove an embarrassment. So she got a pistol from her bureau drawer—because she was a practical soul and dwelt alone. She had purchased the pistol as a precaution—and went to the door. She cocked the pistol, took a long breath, threw open the door suddenly and raised her weapon.

"Put 'em up," she commanded harshly.

"Don't be silly, Lanny dear," a soft voice entreated her wearily. "It's only me."

"Nancy Belden—you little devil," Lanny almost shouted. "Come in here this instant."

Nance Belden reeled in and Lanny closed the door behind her, turned the bolt, switched on the hall light—and screamed.

"Pipe down," Nance commanded, in that queer, faint, weary voice. "I'm not a corpse, but I'll tell the world I came mighty close to being one just before lock-up time this afternoon. Lanny, dear, I crashed the gate."

"Well, you'll crash out of here in a split second, you little hellion," Lanny cried sharply. "Wet as a dishrag and your hair like a witch's, and covered with blood. Where are you hurt?"

"Bullet through my left arm, high up near the shoulder. That guard could shoot, and he did! If my boy friend hadn't shot back at him and made him hunt his hole I'd be fishbait this minute."

"You've got to get out of here, Nance," Lanny was terrified. "How many visitors have you had since you've been in San Quentin?"

"Just you, Lanny."

"The authorities will look me up and they'll come here. Understand? They'll come here—there, they're on the telephone now. Oh, my good lord, what have I done to deserve this?"

She dashed into her kitchen and took down the telephone receiver. And again a masculine voice said:

"Miss Rebecca Lanning?"

Lanny controlled herself. "Yes," she said calmly. "Who's speaking?"

"Dan McNamara."

"Oh, hello, Dan. How are you?"

"Fine, Lanny. How's yourself?"

"Well, I might be dead for all the interest you've taken in me since you swallowed that good highball you grafted off me the day you came to Doctor Burt's office with that Nance Belden girl." She added archly—"you egg!"

Dan McNamara laughed. "Can I come out now?"

"The very idea. Of course not. It's almost ten o'clock and I'm just about to retire!"

"This is business, Lanny. I've got to see you at once."

"I didn't know the police were after me."

"The police aren't, but the chief is. Lanny, that Nance Belden escaped from San Quentin late this afternoon. She got to San Francisco all right. We know that because we found the speedboat she crossed the bay in tied up in the yacht harbor at the Marina. There was blood all over the cockpit and bullet holes in the hull."

"All of which proves, Dan, that God's in his heaven and all's well with the world. Are you seriously trying to recover the girl and send her back to the penitentiary?"

"I'm not. I'd give two of my big buck teeth to see her make a clean getaway. You know that. But the warden—naturally. It seems you visited Nance two weeks ago and smuggled a letter out for her and mailed it.

"Dan, I give you my word of honor I neither mailed a letter for her nor passed it to somebody else to mail. Nor did the girl discuss with me any plans for escape. If she had I would have told the warden, in order to prevent her escape. It wouldn't have been kind not to do so. The girl is mentally irresponsible and it would have occurred to me that, in any mad attempt to escape, a guard might shoot at her."

"Well a guard did, and he hit her, too. But he didn't stop her. Her outside gang opened on him with a Tommy gun from a speedboat off the point, and made him hunt his hole. Nance swam out to the boat under cover of their protective fire; they hauled her in and beat it forty-five miles an hour across San Pablo bay and headed up toward Carquinez straits, while daylight lasted. After dark they doused their lights and sneaked back. The warden telephoned Central office here and gave the alarm. I wasn't on hand, but of course the captain on duty had the water front covered at once. He had two men at the St. Francis Yacht club and they saw a speed-boat sneak in and across the little harbor to a vacant berth on the Marina side. Before the cops could hurry across, the people in the boat jumped out and to a waiting car. The cops followed in a police car as soon as they could, but one of Nance's friends riddled their front tires with machine-gun bullets and the trail was lost."

"How exciting, Dan!"

"Yes, and it will be more exciting for you, Lanny. I got home about two minutes ago and my phone was ringing. It was central office trying to report to me. They're just starting a couple of dicks out in a cruiser to watch and see if Nance tries to make your house. You're a trained nurse. The warden's found out that much—matter of looking you up in the San Francisco directory. So he thinks that she'll head for your house to receive medical attention. She got hit, you know. And you must be a friend of hers—otherwise why did you call upon her?"

"Dan," said Lanny desperately, "she's here now!"

"Into your car with her, Lanny, and beat it out to my house with her." He gave her the address. "That's the last place on earth the devil himself would hunt for an escaped convict."

"I've just heard a thump and a crash in my living room, Dan. I think she's fainted. Telephone Doctor Burt to come to your home—that he will have to probe a bullet wound and dress it. Tell him to bring some whisky and two or three hot-water bags, and be on hand yourself to let me in. I can't leave here until I've mopped up any bloodstains she may have left on the sidewalk and my front steps. Good-by."

Lanny was right. Nance Belden lay on the floor of the living room in a faint. She picked the girl up in her strong arms and carried her down a short flight of stairs that led from her kitchen to the garage below. She heaved her into the car, ran back upstairs, got a wet mop, and by the light of the electric lamp over the front entrance searched for drops of blood. She found a few and followed them to the sidewalk, eradicating them with vigorous sweeps of the mop, then dashed back into the house, jammed on her hat and coat, ran outside again, threw open the garage door and backed her car out. She paused again, to shut it, then swung up the street as the half-red lamps of a police cruising car turned the corner. She swung wide to give it a clear berth, turned the first corner and spurted. She followed a zig-zag course until she felt sure she had thrown the police car off her trail—provided they had become suspicious and started to follow her; she turned up a residence street that she felt reasonably certain would not be patrolled by traffic officers at that hour of the night, and speeded up.

Dan McNamara was standing on the sidewalk in front of his house when she drew up. He reached into her car, lifted Nance Belden out and ran with her down an alley alongside the house to the basement entrance, which he kicked open. Lanny followed. Up the stairs to the kitchen the big chief ran, through the kitchen and on to a rear bedroom. Lanny jerked a small rug off the floor and threw it on the bed. "Let her bleed on that for a while," she commanded. "No sense in messing this nice clean bed all up. There must be blood in my car, Dan. Take a wet towel and go out and clean it thoroughly, please, while I'm undressing this poor lamb. Get me one of your wife's clean nightgowns."

"Ain't got no wife, Lanny. Use one of mine."

"Just as good as any. Get it. Who takes care of you here?"

"My mother."

"Can she be trusted?"

"I've sent her to the country for a month," he evaded. "I'm sleeping here and eating downtown.

"God bless our home, Dan. Clear out—and watch for Stevie and let him in."

She ran to the kitchen, turned on the hot water and set an enameled skillet under the faucet; then returned, undressed the girl. In an adjoining bathroom she found clean towels and placed a cold one on her head. When she returned to the kitchen, the enameled skillet was sitting in the midst of a cloud of steam, so she knew it had been thoroughly disinfected; she filled it with warm water, carried it into the room and with a wet towel mopped the two holes in Nance's arm and examined the wound.

"Missed the bone," she decided. "Bled like a stuck pig, of course, piece of her dress probably carried into the wound."

In the medicine closet, Lanny discovered a small bottle of iodine. So she doused the wound with it, wrapped a cold towel around the girl's shoulder and tucked her into bed.

In the living room she found a brass box with cigarettes in it, so she lit one and sat down beside Nance, with her capable fingers on the girl's pulse. Evidently the count was satisfactory, for Lanny scowled at the girl and growled: "You little devil! And 'I crashed the gate,' says she proudly. Well, if you aren't the little hell-bender! You've got the nerve of a lion-tamer!"

She found a comb and brush in Dan McNamara's bureau and combed and smoothed the dank, straggly black bob, and when that was done she unbent long enough to implant a kiss on the white brow. "Poor lamb!" she murmured. "Nobody's poor lost darling!"

The girl's eyelids flickered.

"Is that you, Lanny?" the girl murmured faintly.

"Yes, dearie. And you're all right, so don't worry. Nobody's going to take you back to San Quentin."

"The cops chased us at the boat landing, Lanny. Are you sure we shook them off?"

"Of course you did—the big boobs! Now, listen, dearie. I'm going to tell you something, but don't let it disturb you. Take my word for it you're safe. Do you remember Dan McNamara, the chief of police?"

"Of course. Old Daniel's my boy friend."

"Well, you're in his bed. The cops were on your trail, dearie. They suspected you might come to my house, so Dan tipped me off they were coming and to beat it with you out to his house."

Terror shone in the girl's dark eyes. "I'd never trust a cop that far," she wailed. "Oh, Lanny, you've let him make a sucker out of you." She began to weep hysterically.

"If you don't stop that," Lanny promised, "I'll bat you over the head with this skillet," and she picked that homely utensil up and shook it at Nance. "Dan McNamara's your friend."

"Yes, and chief of police, too. Lanny, I'll die if they take me back. They'll put me in the dungeon—I'm afraid of the dark."

"Shut up. You're not afraid of anything. You've got your little red badge of courage, you scaramouche! You afraid? My foot! Didn't you crash the gate and swim for that speedboat under fire?"

"Machine-gun fire, at that," Dan McNamara supplemented, from the doorway. "They opened on her and the boat from the towers." He came to the side of the bed and grinned down at the terrified girl. "Don't you worry, Nance. You're safe. I'm a cop, but I'm not without some sporting blood—your getaway earns three rousing cheers from old Dan McNamara." His big hand strayed over her face.

"You're a good old hunk of cheese," she assured him.

She turned her head toward Lanny. "Am I going to die, Lanny?" she asked.

"Not unless I kill you—which I'm liable to do if you don't buck up and believe what I tell you. You've been shot but it doesn't amount to much. You'll be all right in a week or two."

"Then I'll be good, Lanny." The tired eyes closed and while Lanny stood by, wondering what to say next, Nance sank into a sleep of profound exhaustion.

"Let her alone until Stevie comes," Lanny suggested. "The wound has stopped bleeding. Come out into the living room and if you're as crooked a cop as you ought to be you've got liquor in the house and I've got to have a drink of it." Her middle-aged face was very serious.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Dan McNamara Reached Into the Car, Lifted Nance Belden Out, Ran Up the Stairs and On to a Rear Bedroom. Lanny Jerked a Small Rug Off the Floor and Threw It on the Bed.

Lincoln, the Poet

By MARGARET E. BRUNER in Indianapolis News

THE world has honored him as one whose heart
Was touched by sorrows of a fettered race—
Who, in his kindness sought to ease the smart
Of suffering, nor turned averted face;
For he was kind to every desolate
And hunted creature—lonely tree and hill;
There was a hunger he could never sate,
A longing he could never quite fulfill.
He was a mighty poet, though he wrote
No lines by which the world could know his art;
But I am sure he heard the perfect note—
Felt rhythms which the mind could not impart,
A genial man, and yet with soul depressed,
His songs forever locked within his breast.

Sacred Heritage to the American People

ONE hundred and twenty-six years have rolled into the ages since the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Kindled at the very hearthstone of his being were the fires of two great principles whose flames have burned with a brilliance undimmed by time through generation after generation—the cause of liberty and equality for every man. Believing inherently in these two great truths, his became an inspired vision.

When the startling breath of war's alarm spread throughout the land, in defense of these principles, with impassioned zeal, he led his country to noble victory. The memory of this rugged man of modest dignity and enduring qualities, whose broad ideals become more clearly revealed with the passing years, is a sacred heritage to the American people.

Though the treasured dust and ashes, once his mortal frame, have long been enshrined by a worshipful nation, his immortal spirit lies not entombed, for today, in the hearts of our grateful Republic, the inspiration of the martyred soul of Abraham Lincoln to eternal freedom goes marching on.

Lincoln Wordage Beats Bible and Shakespeare

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S writings and speeches now in print exceed in volume of words both the Bible and the works of Shakespeare, according to information by Dr. Louis Warren, director of the Lincoln National Life foundation, writes a Fort Wayne (Ind.) United Press correspondent.

In 1772, after three years of work, an English man fouud that the Bible contained 926,877 words. Shakespeare's complete works have been estimated to contain 1,024,000 words. The written and spoken words of Lincoln total approximately 1,078,365 words, according to Doctor Warren.

While the Bible and Shakespeare's works are complete, many of Lincoln's writings and speeches still are unpublished. The count did not include Lincoln's own personal papers, the traditional Lincoln anecdotes, or the many personal letters which are still in private hands.

CALIFORNIA News of the Week

Dr. A. P. Krueger, associate professor of bacteriology, University of California, has developed a new vaccine which has proved beneficial in combating the common cold. The treatment which was developed in the university school, consists of hypodermic injections.

State Controller Riley, in a recent report, points out the grave danger of the state's defaulting its bonds in June, saying that the treasury is decidedly short of funds and "unless this condition is remedied, the state is in grave danger of default on bond charges and the resulting impairment of the state's credit." The December school funds had to be deferred because of treasury shortage, he added.

A huge steel gate dropped into slot number four diversion tunnel on Friday, February 1, and one of the world's greatest engineering projects began to function. As the huge gate plugged the tunnel water began piling up behind the gigantic Boulder Dam, thus assuring California's rich Imperial Valley of protection against drought and giving the area abundant water. Although the dam is not yet finished, part of it can be used.

The state deficit at the end of the present fiscal year, June 30, will be $28,751,698, estimates State Controller Ray L. Riley in his biennial report. He declared that if adequate revenues be provided to balance the budget for the next two years, the Legislature need not worry about the deficit. Improved business conditions, he believes, will bring in increased revenue which will absorb the deficit.

According to the sun-spot theory worked out by the late Dr. Jerome Ricard, Padre of the Rains, Dr. Albert J. Newlin, director of the Ricard Memorial Observatory at the University of Santa Clara, declares that California can expect wet winters for the next few years. The theory says that there are wet and dry cycles and that there are also cycles of sun-spots, the two coinciding.

"You're on the spot, so get out of town!" With this curt command ringing in his ears, and with a pistol shoved into the small of his back, 70-year-old William Hanks, witness in a trial of 17 Communists at Sacramento, was driven out of town. This is part of his testimony against the Communists, who are being tried for criminal syndicalism. Another citizen testified that he also had been threatened with death if he appeared at the trial.

Temporarily bound together in their fight for lower telephone rates, cities in eastern San Bernardino and western Los Angeles counties may form a permanent alliance for solving their problems. Such a municipal league, it is believed, will also aid flood control work. Upland, LaVerne, Claremont, Ontario, Chino and others are considering the plan.

Under an agreement signed by the Central Eureka Mining Company and the Mother Lode Miners Union No. 48 both sides have submitted their case to an arbitration board. The board's conclusions will be given in March. Questions to be arbitrated include wages hours and working conditions. The Central Eureka is one of the four Amador County mines to close last year following a strike. It has resumed partial operations.

Like scavenger gulls flying ahead of a ship, grafters and racketeers of all kinds are descending on San Diego in van of the California Pacific International Exposition, according to complaints to police. One racket consists of a small group who pose as being on the "inside" of Townsend old age plan politics, claiming that they know the plan will go through. They are charging elderly people $3 each to put them on the first payrolls.

Los Angeles' city hall was subjected to a severe shakeup the other day. It wasn't an earthquake, nor was it a political upheavel. That city's tallest building was given a man-made earthquake to test its structural reactions. A large "earthquake" machine was braced between steel pillars on the 24th floor. It was set in motion, first to test the horizontal motion, then the vertical. Sensitive instruments kept track of the movements.

State Board of Equalization officials are bemoaning the fact that the recent court tax decision in favor of the Pacific Railway set a precedent whereby many public utilities in California will escape paying taxes until July, 1935. In the test case, the railway company successfully contended their 1934 gross receipts tax was in lieu of all other taxes—state and local—until the middle of the year. The state loss is at least $3,000,000.

Sensational allegations are contained in a petition on file in the Los Angeles probate court, opposing Mrs. Geraldine May Lee's fight for a share of the two million dollar estate of the late Don Lee, auto and radio magnate, who died last August 30, a short time after their marriage. The petition was filed by Thomas S. Lee, son, principal heir and one of the executors. He alleges that the marriage of Lee and the widow in Tia Juana was illegal, the couple failing to comply with Mexican laws. Mrs. Lee was not mentioned in the will.

On the Funny Side

SHADOW OF DOUBT

Mrs. Hardface was trailing her diminutive husband round the big store much against his will.

After purchasing several articles she paused and looked pensive.

"Ah," she said at last, "I remember. We want a lamp-shade for the drawing room light."

Presently the article in question caught her eye.

"There's the very lamp-shade I wanted!" she cried. "It's two guineas. Don't you think it will do, John?"

He shook his head.

"No, my dear," he replied miserably. "I think it's a shade too dear."

Betrayed

Bagshaw was pouring out his unhappy experience to his friend at the club.

"And what caused you to leave before the meeting was over?" asked the latter.

Bagshaw looked uncomfortable.

"W-well," he stammered, "the lecturer stated that one's shady character is denoted on the lower part of the face."

"Well, what of that?" asked the other.

The dejected one lowered his voice.

"Why," he murmured, "I-I've got a double chin."

Good Bag

Jones came along the street looking wet and unhappy.

"Hello," said his neighbor: "Where have you been?"

"Fishing," replied Jones mournfully.

"Catch much?" was the question.

"A lot," Jones replied "First train there; first train back. Caught in a thunder storm; caught a cold."

"And"—an after-thought—"I shall catch it when I get home."

NOTHING DOING

"You've got a cold, old man."

"Yes. Don't know how I caught it, but it seems—

"Now, look here. I know a sure cure—that is, if you take it right away."

"No use. Seven men have made me promise to try theirs first and I can't take yours right away, so it won't be any good at all. Sorry. Good-by."

Just a Suggestion

Mrs. Jowles—With feet the size of yours, you should get a job with the government.

Mr. Jowles—What doing?

Mrs. Jowles—Oh, stamping out forest fires, perhaps.

Hm-m!

Defendant (being questioned on the stand)—I've been wedded to the truth from infancy!

Prosecutor—Is the court to imply from this statement that you are now a widower?

6—35

Every Time

Wife—Man is the stately ship; woman the little tugboat at its side.

Hubby—Sure; it's the ship that always gets torpedoed, not the tug.

Build The Highway Now

(From The Alaska Weekly)

J. W. Marchbank is now a resident of the State of California but so long as this pioneer continues to draw the breath of life he will be living for and fighting for the Northland he loves and in which he stills maintains substantial financial as well as sentimental interest. He has recently caused to be reprinted in pamphlet form an article from his pen which was originally printed in the Daly City Record, of Daly City, California, and which he titled, "Golden Highways and Unemployment." When the pamphlet came to our desk it served as one more powerful reminder that everyone with the slighest interest in Alaska (and that includes every American) should be unremitting in the effort to force through the present Congress the necessary appropriations for the building of the International Highway and if need be for the financing of the Canadian portion of the road with proper provision for the return of the funds so advanced.

Although connected with continental United States, Alaska, due to lack of transportation arteries, is insular to all effects--entirely dependent upon steamships and airplanes. This fact cost the territory a huge sum during the recent longshoremen's strike—a recurrence of which stands as a constant menace. That it is also stupidly shortedsighted from a military standpoint seems altogether obvious. The establishment of air mail and commercial air routes to Alaska would be a simple matter with a series of air fields along the route of an established highway. The military significance of that statement requires no elaboration. The route chosen for the proposed highway is compartively free from the fog, rain and hidden mountains which have discouraged the establishment of regular air lines to Alaska by the coast routes. Moreover, the westward extension of the road through Alaska constitute the most practicable air route to Asia.

In the closing paragraphs of the pamphlet mentioned above, Mr. Marchbank said, "From the economic point of view, with the reasonable possibility that at least 6,000,000 men can make a living in developing the mineral and agricultural resources of the 500,000 square miles of Alaska, the highways is an urgent necessity. I can think of no public work that surpasses it in urgency. Whatever money is advanced by the Federal government will be returned many fold. It can be denominated in all fairness a highly desirable loan—a humane loan, giving almost countless citizens an opportunity to develop to the full self-reliance, the highest of all virtues."

That may seem like exaggeration to you. It does not to us. Every former major depression has resulted in the exodus of the hardy from the congested industrial centers to the ever-beckoning frontiers just as eras of "easy money" have been responsible for the reverse, bringing thousands who belonged on the farms and in the hills to the disillusionment of the smoke, etench and time clocks of the city. We find it hard to believe that America has developed a race of jelly fish lads who prefer the dole to an opportunity to pioneer a glorious empire if that opportunity were to be made available. All authorities are agreed that the road will open tremendous areas of known mineralized lands, that it will make available billions of feet of timber, that it traverses millions of acres of arable lands, that most of the country it would serve abounds in furs, that it would bring into comparatively easy reach of the continent a sportsman's paradise second to none, that it would be of tremendous military value, that it would serve to further cement the friendship existing between ourselves and Canada —yet we bemoan our millions of unemployed, pass them a crust of bread, break them with the humilition of accepting charity and withhold the empire which might be theirs for the expenditure of a comparatively paltry sum.

That the highway is feasible from an engineering and construction standpoint there is no longer question. That it can be built at a reasonable cost which pales into insignificance when compared to the acknowledged benefits to be realized is generally admitted. That it fits into the road plan which is expected one day to connect all the Americas all of us know. That the present is the time during which its construction would be a Godsend to the unemployed none can deny. Why it is not built God only knows.

NECESSITY FOR PARENT TEACHER ORGANIZATION

(By Maude Larue Ives)

What a wonderful thing it is that at last society as a whole has come to realize that there is more than one educational institution for the children. About thirty-five years ago, when the National Congress of Parents and Teachers was organized, only one great teacher of children was commonly recognized, and that was the school teacher. That the parents were teachers, that the next door neighbors and others in the community were teachers, and that the Sunday-school "teachers" should be real teachers, had not yet been acknowledged. The National Congress of Parents and Teachers is especially interested in four of these educational institutions—the home, the school, the church and the community.

The home is the first school for the child, because it is the one into which he is born. As he opens his eyes upon this new and strange world, his education begins. His first teacher is his mother. How necessary, then that this mother know something of the physical care of the child, of child psychology, of mental hygiene, of spiritual values. In these first few days she begins the education of her baby. Then the next teacher enters, and from that time there are two teachers more or less constantly with the child—the father and the mother.

The National Congress of Mothers was organized in Washington, D. C. in 1897. Its originator, Mrs. Theodore W. Birney, believed that mothers should take their task of motherhood more seriously and be better trained for it, because they were more constantly with the child during its early years than anyone else. Study groups were organized among the mothers of pre-school children, where studies were made of the best ways of meeting the problems related to the training of the young child.

But young children have a way of growing up, and before long these mothers and fathers found the children going joyously to the next school—the public or private school taught by trained teachers. What was to be done now? Were mother and father to know nothing about this phase of school life of the child except the fragmentary reports brought home by him? Because of the need of understanding between parents and teachers, the national organization changed its name to the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, and a few years later the organization became known as the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. A National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers was organized with the assistance of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers in ,May 1926. Now there are a number of organized state branches for colored people, with several thousand members. The same general policies are followed by both organizations.

Clean Commutator

When a commutator is dirty or oily the flow of electrical current from it will be noticeably reduced, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

Sometimes the commutator may be cleaned with a small piece of dry, clean cloth. When the commutator however, it should be taken to a service station where it can be properly is coated with black foreign matter, cleaned with fine sand paper. Damage might be caused if this is done by a ninexperienced person.

Meaning Of Misfiring

Another meaning of misfiring is that raw gasoline is dripping down the cylinder walls into the crankcase to dilute the lubricant in the latter, states the director of roadside service of the National Automobile Club. It is doubly damaging.

DEDUCTIONS OF INCOME TAX FOR AUTO OWNERS

Must Pay Taxes On Things Used For Operation Of Private Automobiles

make certain deductions in their income tax returns for sums paid out in connection with the ownership and operation of automobiles, according to the Legal Department of the California State Automobile Association. These allowable deductions do not include, however, the state gasoline tax in California, the federal gasoline tax, or the federal taxes on lubricating oil, tires, tubes, accessories and new cars and motor trucks. A Department of Internal Revenue ruling are not not to be considered as taxes holds that these taxes are imposed by law upon the manufacturers and on the consumer.

Deductions which automobile owners are allowed to make in computing their taxable income include the following:

All sums paid during the calendar year as registration fees, personal property taxes, and municipal taxes.

Interest on money borrowed for the purchase of an automobile.

The amount of financing charges on automobiles purchased, which covers the interest on the loan, when specifically set forth in the contract, but not the amount covering the premium on insurance to protect the finance company's interest.

All operating and maintenance expense, including depreciation, on automobiles used wholly for business, or a pro rata share of such expenses representing business use where a passenger car is used chiefly (more than 50 per cent) for business. Depreciation usually is figured at 25 per cent per annum.

Automobile insurance on automobiles used for business purposes.

Uncompensated losses, sustained by reason of damage to automobiles used for business purposes.

Damage paid for injuries to persons or for destruction of property, provided the automobile at the time of the accident was being used for business.

Loss sustained when a car used for business is sold outright at a price less than its depreciated value. (Loss sustained where an automobile used for business is traded in for a new car cannot be deducted, but such loss can be considered as part of the cost when computing depreciation for the ensuing year.)

No deduction can be made for the amount paid for an automobile used for either business or pleasure, this being a capital expenditure and subject to claim for depreciation where the automobile is used for business.

Where an employe receives an allowance or mileage from the employer for automobile operation, unless such allowance is declared as part of income no claim can be made by the employe for deduction on account of operating expenses.

STREET CAR STOP CAUTION URGED ON AUTO DRIVER

Danger faces persons alighting from or boarding street cars if they are forced to make their way through rapidly moving traffic. The need for cautious driving increases sharply when a motorist approches a street car which has stopped to let off or take on passengers. These points are being stressed by the pubilc safety department of the California State Automobile Association in a series of educational activities directed this month to the motoring public.

With accident records for the past several years revealing a steady increase in traffic casualties involving pedeserians, the motorists organization is seeking to concentrate the attention of drivers upon requirements of law designed for the safety of persons alighting from or boarding street cars.

The automobile association points out that California law prohibits the driver of any vehicle from passing a street car or interurban railway car on the left, except on a one way street . The law requires that every driver, upon overtaking a street car which has stopped or is about to stop, shall come to a stop to the rear of the nearest running board or door of the car and shall remain standing until passengers have boarded the car or reached a place of safety.

Certain exceptions are made to this rule. Where a safety zone has been established, or at an intersection where traffic is controlled by an officer or a stop-and-go- signal, a motorist need not come to a full stop before passing a street car but may proceed at a speed not greater than is reasonable and proper and in no case at more than ten miles per hour, with due caution for the safety of pedestrians.

Similar care should be exercised by motorists when passing common carrier buses or other vehicles which have stopped for the purpose of discharging or taking on passengers.

Avoid Corrosion

Wiping the battery with a rag moistened with ammonia will counteract the corroding effect of any of the battery solution that may be present on the outside of the battery, according to emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

Gar Filter Care

Gasoline filters should be cleaned every few months, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Not more than five minutes are required as a rule for this feature of car care.

In order to clean the filter unscrew the thumb nut at the bottom of the small glass reservoir, usually located in the fuel line under the hood, and thoroughly clean both the glass and the small screen it contains.

COLUMN OF N. R. A. FACTS

INFORMATION regarding the N. R. A. will be furnished each week by W. H. CLAY, Chairman of the local N. R. A. Publicity Committee.

The policy to be adopted by Congress concerning the form in which NRA will be continued after June 16, when the present Recovery Act expires, continues to engross the attention of American business men. The consensus of a large proportion of opinion is that the present act should be extended temporarily without change. Such a temporary extension, its advocates declare, would give an opportunity for further necessary observation and study of the working of codes of fair competition.

Discussing this proposal, the New York Journal of Commerce said: "Merchants who listen to S. Clay Willams at the banquet of the National Retail Dry Goods Association commended the suggestion he made in relation to a continuance of the codes of the NRA for a year or two more for further experiment and study before throwing it into Congress for revisions. The belief that something of permanent value to industry had been added by the codes has been strong in many places where their advent was unwelcome."

The NRA from its inception has been carried out on the principle of trial and error. This was emphasized by Mr. Williams when he told the business men in New York that most of the two year term provided in the law had to go to the processes of setting up the codes and starting their operation.

"Little time for observation and study and remodeling has been afforded," he continued. "But observation and study and amendment are necessary. Many codes were necessarily put together hurriedly and applied without taking the too heavy penalties involved in too much delay. Also, many provisions were put into codes on a purely experimental basis. There was no precedent for any such undertaking as NRA. * * * But with the period of code building behind us and with some record of experience established on all code provisions, NRA has passed into a phase that presents a different and much less spectacular task, but on the other hand offers an opportunity for much more deliberate method than was possible in its less commonplace phase."

Discussing results already achieved under NRA, Mr. Williams went on to say "it would seem reasonable to assume that as far as business is concerned it will be permitted to follow its course largely along its recent lines without radical change within."

The speaker therefore asked for a further trial of the present NRA in order to detrmine out of further experimentation just what the future and permanent structure of the organization should embody.

"If," said he, "we may look back over our shoulders one minute by way of comparing the current method of business with that which prevailed before NRA, we can mark the difference in two sentences: Business has been asked, in the general interest and particularly in the interest of that group who work in the factories of the country and in the distribution and service trades, to accept and operate upon the principle that the wages of that group should not be submitted to competition below a minimum that represents a living wage for a fixed number of hours of labor.

"And, simultaneously, while wages were being taken out of competition below fixed minimums, provision was made for suspension of the antitrust laws to the extent that should be approved by the administration as necessary to provide against destructive or unfair competition and remove the barriers that were hindering business from becoming able to meet the increased wage demand without destroying its opportunity to operate successfully.

"In application, those two provisions have ramified themselves out into scores of detailed provisions but fundamentally they are the whole of NRA, and the point here is that there is nothing in either that should destroy or weaken confidence in the future of business in this country."

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK

1934 Sales Volume Gains 32.3 Percent. Sales of general merchandise in small towns and rural areas were about 21 percent higher in dollar volume last year than in 1933, and 32.5 percent higher than in 1932, according to preliminary estimates released by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

Daily average sales in December, 1934, were 20 percent higher than in December, 1933, and 59 percent above those in December, 1932. The increase from November to December last year, 20 percent, was larger than the average 15.5 percent increase during the last five years and four times as large as the increase from November to December, 1933.

Labor Board Adjusts 225 Hollywood Cases. The Studio Labor Board, established to handle labor complaints arising in Hollywood studios under the motion-picture industry code, successfully disposed of 225 cases in the first eight months of its existence, according to a report submitted by its chairman, W. Jefferson Davis.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, compliance and enforcement director and division administrator in charge of amusement codes, who created the Board under the motion picture code authority in May, 1934, said:

"No decision of the board have been disrupted nor have any appeals been taken. This is noteworthy in view of the fact that all studios are uniformly affected by the decisions of this board."

In his report to the division administrator, the chairman of the Studio Larbor Board said in part: "Representation of the producers, labor, and the government as in the set-up of the motion picture industry is the ideal arrangement. The rules of procedure shold be as simple as possible and as free from legal technicalities as possible. The results which we have obtained through our board could not in my judgment be obtained in a better manner."

Advertising Gained 10.6 Percent in 1934. During 1934, advertising spent about $490,000,000 for space in American daily newspapers, according to an estimate made from returns from 52 cities, appearing in Editor and Publisher, a newspaper and advertising publication.

The lineage figures for the year showed a gain of 10.6 percent over 1933, and 1-2 percent over 1932. They were 37.9 percent below 1929, the peak year in newspaper advertising. For the last 15 months, according to the article, each month's linage has been greater than that for the corresponding month of the previous year.

The Editor and Publisher's linage index shows that advertising volume mounted steadily for the first six months last year. Then it dropped and wavered within a narrow range until October, when it rose from 88.4 to 94.4 in November, and 97.1 in December.

Improved Trade Seen in Production Gain. Improved business conditions extending into the first half of January have brought a counter seasonal upturn in industrial production, the latest National Industrial Conference Board bulletin disclosed. December retail trade was said to have recorded a greater than seasonal gain over November.

Major industries improved at a quicker than normal pace in December, the board found, and continued the expansion in January. Automobile activity was credited as the pivotal influence in the increased output of dependent trades.

During the last six weeks, according to the board, steel and iron production has moved up in a period when ordinarily no improvement is seasonal. Machine tool orders have advanced sharply, continuing the upturn since June, and other basic production industries were said to have held the gains of earlier months.

Teachers' Best Year Since 1929 Predicted. More teachers will obtain employment in 1935 than at any time since 1929, Clyde L. Miller, director of the Bureau of Education Service at Teachers College, Columbia University, declared in presenting his annual report.

Mr. Miller pointed out that the college placement bureau in 1934 obtained 38 percent more full time positions for teachers than in the preceding year. Although placement in part time positions declined three percent in the same period, the earnings from these positions increased by $25,486.

LESSON SERMON OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

In all Christian Science churches, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., a Lesson-Sermon will be read Sunday, February 10, on the subject "Spirit."

The Golden Text will be: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." (II Corinthians 3:17). Bible selections will include the following passages from Romans 8:1, 14, 16, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. . . For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. . . . The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."

A passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, will also be included, which reads as follows: "Man understands spiritual existence in proportion as his treasures of Truth and Love are enlarged. Mortals must gravitate Godward, their affections and aims grow spiritual,—they must near the broader interpretations of being, and gain some proper sense of the infinite,—in order that sin and mortality may be put off" (p. 265).

SOME QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Some Little Known Matters That Should Prove of General Interest

(By Maude Larue Ives)

Question: Is there really an "Isle of Capri?"

Answer: Yes in ancient times known as Capreae, is a beautiful Italian island, in the Bay of Naples, celebrated for its delightful climate and invigorating air. It yearly attracts many thousands of tourists. The area is five and three-fourths square miles, and the highest elevation, Mount Solaro, rises 1920 feet above the sea. The islanders produce white and red wine, oil and fruits.

The capital, Capri, is in the eastern portion, Anacapri, in the west, is built on a plateau 880 feet above the sea and is reached by a winding road cut through the rock.

Question: How do birds breathe?

Answer: Like the more highly developed vertebrates, birds breathe with lungs, and their breathing is full and rapid. In addition to its pair of good-sized lungs, a bird possesses air sacs, which are under muscular control and can be inflated or emptied at will. One of the functions of the air sacs is ventilation of the lungs. These little bags also permit a singing bird like the night-in-gale from getting out of breath when it is launched on a long continued melody.

Question: What valuable service did the Boy Scouts render to this country during the World War?

Answer: In the selling of Liberty Bonds and in the planting of war gardens.

The Boy Scouts of European countries also rendered distinguished service during the World War.

Question: Where is the smallest international bridge in the world?

Answer: Between two small islands in the Saint Lawrence River. One island belongs to Canada, the other to the United States.

Question: What weed of Canada and the United States is a great pest, and how is it exterminated?

Answer: The Canada Thistle. Within the tubes of its small purplish flowers is formed a sweet nectar, which attracts countless bees and butterflies, wasps, flies and beetles. The pollen grains have a slight stickiness and are carried away with the greatest ease on the hairs of the insects, to be later deposited on the stigma of another flower. The plant also is well adapted to fertilization by means of its seeds and its horizontal rootstocks, every portion of which can produce a new plant. For this reason, partial uprooting may work harm, for several plants may spring up where only one grew before.

Since the roots are kept alive with food supplied by the leaves, it is possible to starve them by cutting down the green stems as fast as they appear.

Question: What is Saint Bernard, Great?

Answer: A famous pass over the Alps now noted chiefly for the hospice at its summit, about 8100 feet above the sea. The hospice was founded in the eleventh century by Saint Bernard of Menthon, and has been maintained by the Augustine monks as a refuge for travelers. With the aid of their famous dogs, the good monks save the lives of many wayfarers in the winter months. One dog alone saved the lives of forty persons and was slain by the forty-first, a frenzied man whom he was trying to help.

In the summer and autumn, many foreigners visit the hospice. It now has accommodations for over 300 people, but nobody is ever allowed to spend longer than one day except in case of illness, injury or winter storms. The visitor announces his arrival by ringing a great bell. No payment is permitted for food and lodging, but every visitor is supposed to place a contribution, according to his means, in a little box in the chapel.

Makes Big Difference

A small adjustment that usually makes a big difference in the manner in which the car performs is that in the spark timing, remarks the director of roadside service of the National Automobile Club.

Good performance is imperatively dependent upon the spark reaching the cylinder at the proper fraction of an instant, and this happy circumstance is never assured unless the ignition system is given periodic attention. It means economy in fuel, too.

Oil Diminishes Power

An oil that is beyond the recommended viscocity, in other words one that is too heavy, may reduce the engine noises, according to L. G. Evans, general service manager of the National Automobile Club, but it should be borne in mind that it also results in a power loss in some instances.

DOUBLE SURPRISE STORK SHOWER

A double surprise stork shower was given on January 26 by Mrs. A. J. Silvaness of Los Banos avenue and Mrs. J. Goyenech of Sadowo street in honor of Mrs. R. Torres of Los Olives avenue and Mrs. J. Munguia of Sharon street. Both parties being invited to one another's shower, and had no inkling of what was to come. Mrs. Torres had the honor of being escorted to the affair by her son, Frank Torres.

The evening was begun with music furnished by the Happy Four Hiwiian Melodians, with singing and dancing and entertainment rendered by many of the guests.

At midnight all the ladies were asked to step into another room, with the exception of the two guests of honor.

In the surprise room the ladies were seated in their places. The room was beautifully decorated with pink and blue crepe paper and the table was also beautifully decorated with pink and blue baby buggies. Favors, together with pink diapers, and in one corner of the room was a large stork delivering the many gifts and on the opposite corner was Mrs. J. C. Shaves dressed in baby clothes, sitting in a high chair. Then both guests of honor were escorted to the surprise room by Mrs. A. J. Silvanes. The room was unlighted except for the table candles, and as they entered the lights were switched on.

After the buffet supper and refreshments were served the stork delivered the many gifts, assisted by Mrs. William Strand. All gifts were opened and acknowledged. The remainder of the night was spent with more fancy dancing and entertainment.

The following were present: Messers and Mesdames J. Goyeneche, R. Lozano, A. Baron, J. C. Shaves, F. Verlardi, E. Kahoiwai, R. Smith, E. Foss, R. Bulnes, M. Sanchez, A. Pelleciarni, J. Deli, L. BAD WEATHER IS NOT TO BLAME

Bad weather gets more blame for automobile accidents than it deserves states the public safety department of the National Automobile Club. Statistics show that accidents often decrease during a storm.

Bad weather puts a driver on his mettle. The handling of the car is harder on slippery roads. Yet we often hear people blaming the weather for an accident.

Skidding has increased with the growth of power-ratio of automobiles during the past five years. For those who are willing to take a chance on skidding, but are mindful of their pocketbooks, statistics show an alarming increase in tire wear due to the fact that all the added power applied to produce greater acceleration and speedability is applied at the point of contact of the tire and the road and has its corresponding penalty in increased tire stress.

Speedometer Care

The speedometer cable should be removed from its casing and lubricated about every 2500 miles according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

Lubricant recommended by the speedometer manufacturer should be used for this purpose. If a substitute is used care should be taken to select a grease that will not soften and run out when warm, or become too stiff in cold weather.

Foods, and the Pocketbook

Necessary Lowering of Standards Must Not Be Allowed to Threaten the Health of the Family by the Denial of Essentials.

Nutrition in reference to cost is the big problem which is concerning all of us these days, whether our own food budgets have been cut to the bone, or whether we are straining all our resources to help the many families in our neighborhood who are in need of aid.

In this emergency, the dietetic authority who wrote this article points out, the organized institutions which have been dealing with family relief in prosperous times—for there is always relief problems—have been found ready to deal with the situation as far as it is possible at a moment when they have been obliged to cut the amount of aid given to each family below an adequate amount. One of the most serious results of the necessary lowering of food standards is the possibility of permanent injury to the future health of children who have not been supplied with the food essentials which they must have for the proper development of growing bodies.

From the Department of Agriculture in Washington the Farmers Bulletin No. 1674, entitled "Food for Children," will be furnished for the asking. This has been prepared by the bureau of home economics in cooperation with the Washington Child Research Center, and is most complete. The American Child Health association will supply a bulletin entitled "Food at Low Cost," by Lucy H. Gillett, for three cents, with a lower price on large numbers. While these bulletins consider particularly the problem of child feeding, they can be applied to the problem of family food, as the principles are the same for the old and young. Of course, it is more necessary for children to have milk than for adults, who, however, will find it difficult on a low-cost diet to get proper nourishment without its use.

One of the results of the cutting down of the money available for food, it has been found, has been an increase in the disease known as pellagra, which has been heretofore more prevalent in the South than in other sections of the country. For many years the cause was unknown. At present it seems as if vitamin G has distinct influence upon the prevention of pellagra. The United States public health service has found:

"That people who have enough food, including plenty of milk, lean meat, fish, plenty of green, leafy vegetables, or tomatoes, do not have pellagra. On the other hand, a diet which consists wholly of cornmeal, fat meat, rice or potatoes and molasses or sirup, as in some sections of the country, is likely to produce pellagra." To be good, a diet should include cheese, eggs and vegetables of green or yellow color, in addition to bilk, bread and celeals, lean meat, (fat meat will not prevent pellagra) and tomatoes. But what is to be done when the family pocketbook cannot be stretched to cover all those items?

Every one in your community, however much of the family income has been cut, if it is still adequate, is feeling the responsibility of helping other families less fortunate. The Belmont committee plan of asking one family, or a group of persons, to "adopt" a family during this emergency period, asked for only $15 a week to take care of its bare needs. This low figure means that the most inexpensive foods must be used. Two menus suggested by the bureau of home economics, which can be prepared at a low cost, follow. The recipes which are included are large because they form the principal part of the meal, and two helpings will probably be used.

Creamy Rice Pudding.

6 tablespoons uncooked rice.
⅔ cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg or cinnamon
2 quarts milk made of evaporated milk and diluted with water
2 quarts cold water

Wash the rice, add it and the remaining ingredients to the milk reconstituted, and stir the mixture. Pour into a baking dish and bake three or three and a half hours in a slow oven. Stir occasionally while baking.

Baked Onions in Tomato Sauce.

3 tablespoons flour
10 medium sized onions
3 pints canned tomatoes
1½ bay leaf
½ teaspoon celery seed
3 cloves
3 tablespoons melted butter, margarine or other fat
3 teaspoons salt
Pepper

Skin the onions, cut in half, simmer in lightly salted water for ten minutes, drain, and put in a large baking dish. Cook the tomatoes with the bay leaf, celery seed and cloves for ten minutes, and strain. Blend the flour and melted fat, add to the tomato juice with the salt and pepper, and mix well. Pour over the onions, cover and cook until the onions are tender, about one hour. Serve from the baking dish. Seasoning can, of course, be varied as desired.

Cream of Vegetable Soup.

¼ cup finely chopped onion
¼ cup finely chopped rutabaga turnip
¼ cup finely chopped carrots
¼ cup finely chopped celery
¼ cup melted fat
2 tablespoons flour
2 quarts milk made of 2 cups evaporated milk diluted with water
2 quarts water
1 teaspoon salt

Cook the finely chopped vegetables in the fat for ten minutes, add the flour and stir until all are well blended. In the meantime beat the reconstituted milk in a double boiler, add a little of it to the vegetable mixture, stir well, combine with the rest of the milk, add the salt, and cook for ten minutes. The flavor is improved if the soup is allowed to stand for a short time to blend before serving. Reheat and serve. Other combinations of vegetables can, of course, be used.

Tears and Invitations

Popular girls, I've noticed, never show anything but their best faces in public. They know that while a broken heart is all very well in song and story, as a sleeve decoration it has no charm. So to you who yearn for an appreciative stag line I suggest that you hide your sorrows, if any, behind a gay demeanor and a thorough job of beautifying.—Ruth Murrin, Beauty Editor, Good Housekeeping.

Self-Search Valuable

Never let us be discouraged with ourselves. It is not when we are conscious of our faults that we are the most wicked; on the contrary, we are less so. We see by a brighter light; and let us remember for our consolation that we never perceive our sins till we begin to cure them. —Fenelon.

WHEN YOU TAKE A LAXATIVE

...use a spoon

It isn't what brand of laxative you take that's so important—it's the form. A liquid laxative can be taken in any required amount. If only a little is needed, you need never take a bit too much.

Doctors favor the easily measured liquid laxatives. Instead of any form that does not encourage variation from the fixed dose. A fixed dose may be an overdose for you—or your child.

Always remember this one thing about constipation: the secret of any real relief is reduced dosage.

Give the bowels only as much help as may be needed, and less help as the need grows less. You will find Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin an excellent aid in regulating the bowels. It contains senna and cascara (natural laxatives) and it will clear-up any bilious, sluggish condition without upset. Delightful taste, and pleasant action. Your druggist has it.

Get Rid of Poisons That Make You Ill

Is a constant backache keeping you miserable? Do you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; attacks of dizziness, rheumatic pains, swollen feet and ankles? Do you feel tired, nervous—all unstrung?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly, for functional kidney disorder permits poisons to stay in the blood and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They help the kidneys cleanse the blood of health-destroying poisonous waste. Doan's Pills are used and recommended the world over. Get them from any druggist.

"Nature is bright to the bright. We live in a world of flowers and trees and grass, rivers and lakes and seas, mountains and sunshine."

Oil Affects Plugs

A poor grade of lubricating oil or worn piston rings which permit the oil to pass too freely into the cylinder head often cause spark plugs to misfire, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

The plugs become fouled by excessive carbon deposits, or soot is deposited on the porcelain insulation, causing a short circuit.

Keep Steering Tight

In these days of high steering gear reductions, with ratios greater than ever before, it is more important that all parts of the steering be kept snugly adjusted, acording to L. G. Evans, Director of Roadside Service of the National Automobile Club. Any looseness in the mechanism tends to make quick steering that much more difficult of attainment.

HONOR MISS O'CONNOR AT SURPRISE SHOWER

Last Saturday evening Miss Tessie O'Connor was honored at a surprise shower given by the young ladies of the Southern Pacific office in which she is employed. The affair took place at the beautiful home of Mrs. Frances Smith on Sixteenth avenue in San Francisco. Mrs. Smith was assisted by Miss Audrey Diamond.

After an evening of games, a delicious supper was served in the social hall, which was artistically decorated for the occasion.

Those attending were: Misses Gladys Jones, Sally Harmola, Katherine Gillan, Cecelia Mitchell, Bessie Healey, Tal Tarabori, Beatrice Fredericks, Mayme Bowen, Marge O'Connor, Orila Mellana, Genevieve Lundgren, Eleanor Wittwer, Marguerite Crawford, Lorraine Wall, M. Sims and Mrs. Smith.

Miss O'Connor was presented with 24 rock crystal glasses.

Wire Capacity

Care should be taken when replacing ignition wires to use the same size wire as that which is replaced, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association.

Wire that is not of sufficient size to permit free passage of the current will heat. This rule applies to any electrical device.

COMMISSION OF COUNTY CHIEFS HAVE MEETING

On Friday evening of last week Fire Chief Chesney was called to San Mateo fire department headquarters, where the first meeting of newly appointed County Commission of Fire Chiefs was held. The commission is composed of: First District Daly City Chief A. J. Chesney; second district, Chief H. Morris, San Mateo; third district, Chief Thomas Cuff, Menlo Park; fourth district, Chief Frank Fetter, Half Moon Bay; and fifth district, Chief Wilkie J. Dessen, Burlingame. Chief Cuff was elected chairman, and Chief Morris secretary.

A general discussion took place in regard to giving San Mateo County a uniform or consolidated form of fire protection and prevention.

After considering the qualifications and recommendations of several applicants for the position of County Fire Warden, which the Board of Supervisors requested of the commission, they selected the applicant best qualified, in their opinion, and transmitted their recommendation to the board.

THIRD ANNUAL VETERANS FETE HONORS BIRTH

Celebration Of Washington Natal Day To Be Great Event In Local Circles

The Third Annual Veterans Fete, to take place in San Francisco on Washington's Birthday, promises to outdo many times over its two forerunners which in themselves were "nothing to be sneezed at." Chairmen of all committees for the Fete report unprecedented enthusiasm and co-operation on the part of all committee members which is bound to result in making the Third Annual Veterans Fete and Washington's Birthday celebration an event that will go down on record as the best yet.

Official impetus was given the Fete by Mayor Rossi when he proclaimed February 22, Washington's Birthday, and the date of the Third Annual Veterans Fete sponsored by the San Francisco Chronicle, as National Defense Day, and the period from February 12 to February 22 as National Defense Week.

Announcement that the United States Fleet will be in San Francisco harbor from February 14 until after the Fete was received with great interest. W. H. Moulthrop, Chairman of the Parade Committee, was especially thrilled with this announcement because of the color the Navy will add to the parade picture when it marches up Market street the morning of February 22.

Dr. Jerome Richard, Chairman of the Radio Program Committee for the Fete, has been the recipient of many favorable comments about the series of Veterans Fete broadcasts over KGO every Wednesday night at 9:15.

Interest is keen in the standings that change from day to day of candidates in the George and Martha Washington contest. The purpose of this hard fought contest is to determine, by votes, who will rule over the Fete as George and Martha Washington and six pages who will attend them. The George and Martha Washington pageant at the Civic Auditorium the night of February 22 is a gloriously suitable climax to the great Third Annual Veterans Fete day.

The Third Annual Veterans Fete and Washington's Birthday celebration is a carefully planned and projected program of, by and for Veterans, administered by Veterans, staged by Veterans and the proceeds are distributed by Veterans—for Veterans' relief and welfare.
